Techwood-Clark Howell Homes and Centennial Place records. -- 1930s-2011 and undated. -- 10 Cubic feet (20 boxes)

Scope and Content

The collection consists of project records, tenant association records, publications, photographs, and artifacts of Techwood and Clark Howell Homes, and its redevelopment as Centennial Place. Techwood Clark Howell Homes was a site of training for First Aid war workers. In 1943, Atlanta Housing signed an agreement with the War Housing Center, the National Housing Agency, and the Federal Public Housing Authority that permitted migrate war-workers to be placed in Techwood and Clark Howell Home units. Certain items within the collection document active community participation during the Second World War. The publication The Techwood News Vol. 3 No. 8 in November 4, 1942 contains the article "Moonlit Blackout," which describes the regular surprise blackouts that were held at Techwood and Clark Howell Homes. The collection also contains a notecard the tenant association delivered to the men in armed forces, circa 1940s.

HISTORICAL NOTE:

In 1941, Atlanta Housing's third annual report demonstrated the dire conditions precipitating the completion of low rent public housing. These areas were infested with a large percentage of the city's crime, disease, deaths, and substandard living conditions: "4 out of 5 [houses] lacked either an inside bath or running water or both. It was common to find a whole family living in a single shabby, filthy room." Houses were stacked and leaning against each other, in need of repairs and infested with vermin. Victims of tuberculosis reached a startling 69 percent. It was reported that as much as a third of Atlanta's population lived in the slums. Techwood Homes (Project number Ga. 6-9) consisting of 571 family units was located at 114 Merritts Avenue NW and 430 Techwood Drive NW. Techwood Homes with its companion public housing project, University Homes were the first federally-funded public housing projects in the United States. Techwood Homes was created to house white tenants, and was constructed over the former "Tech Flats" area of Atlanta, across from Georgia Tech. University Homes was created for African American tenants. Construction for the Techwood housing project began in September 1934 and was completed in September 1936 by the U.S. Public Works Administration.

On March 22, 1939, the first parcel of land was acquired for the new Clark Howell Homes, the second housing project to be completed by Atlanta Housing (Project number Ga. 6-1). The Clark Howell Homes was part of the Low Rent Housing Program and were created under the Housing Act of 1937. They were located adjacent from Techwood Homes. Construction for the Clark Howell Homes began in fall of 1939 and was completed November 5, 1940. It was located in District 2, and contained 630 units on 34.9 acres.

Clark Howell Homes was named in honor of Clark Howell, Sr. Clark Howell, Sr. was an Atlanta businessmen and president of the Atlanta Constitution, having succeeded his father Evan P. Howell as its President and editor-in-chief upon his death in 1897, although he had come to work for his father's newspaper in 1884. Previous to working for his father, he had been a journalist for The New York Times and the Philadelphia Press. In addition to being a formidable journalist, Clark Howell, Sr. was equally recognized as a public servant. He did much to aid Charles F. Palmer, Atlanta Housing's first Chairman, in the establishment of Atlanta's first housing projects, and became known as the "father of housing projects in Atlanta." Clark Howell Sr. was initially approached about slum clearance by Charles Palmer. Having begun his housing career in real estate, Palmer found it one thing to promote and finance commercial buildings on downtown sites, but quite another to promote, finance, and rebuild over nine blocks of the worst slums in the city and replace them with decent and safe homes. He knew he had to address what he described as the immediate problem, namely "to develop a packaged program" that required promotion and influential help from a cross section of leaders who would understand the long-range benefits to the community.

In order to build this group of leaders, Palmer formed a Board of Trustees for Techwood, Inc. Its members "must represent the views of capital, labor, local government, the press, and the social-service agencies." The man, Palmer stated, "Whose help would mean most in organizing such a group was Clark Howell, Sr...a great newspaperman and fearless fighter for honest journalism." Palmer credits Clark Howell Sr. as the person who would be instrumental in cutting through the red tape Palmer so often found himself faced with, and securing the federal funds to alleviate slum housing conditions in Atlanta during the 1930s. Clark Howell, Sr. remained a proponent of public housing and the publisher of the Atlanta Constitution until his death on November 14, 1936. His son, Major Clark Howell, Jr. took over as publisher of the Atlanta Constitution, succeeding to his father's interest in housing also.

Centennial Place was the redevelopment of Techwood-Clark Howell Homes. The Techwood-Clark Howell Homes revitalization initiative program began in 1994 and was completed in 1998. The revitalization was partially funded by a federal grant awarded under the HOPE VI Program. 1150 units were impacted by the Techwood-Clark Howell revitalization. The program emphasized dispersed, mixed income developments integrated within the broader community.

Scope and Content

During The Techwood-Clark Howell, Coca-Cola, Georgia Tech Special Project, members of AHA partnered with the Coca-Cola company or "the Coca-Cola Club" and Georgia Tech with the purpose of making some changes "in both the attitude and image of tenants at Techwood-Clark Howell and the physical improvements in this project." Paul Robertson, President of the Coca-Cola Club, represented a group of Coca-Cola employees who were willing to assist the Atlanta Housing Authority as a community action group. Dr. Warner Heemann, Vice President of Georgia Tech, offered the assistance of Georgia Tech's Students to assist in the neighborhood effort. Georgia Power also contributed to this program.
